Virginia Golf Club Receives Second Fine for Sediment Control Violations

If you're a sediment control expert looking for a job in Virginia, perhaps you should contact East Roanoke County's Ballyhack Golf Club ... it appears they could use your help. For the second time in two years, the exclusive club received a fine for improper sediment control on its property.

The first fine was nearly $6,000, and came from Virginia's Department of Conservation and Recreation for sediment and erosion control violations. The following year, after a local property owner issued a complaint, the Virginia Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ) began an investigation.

DEQ found that Ballyhack had released excessive levels of sediment into an unnamed tributary of Back Creek, making state waters detrimental to aquatic or animal life. A consent order between DEQ and the club states that the problem was due in large part to course officials partially draining an irrigation pond in order to install a pump. Follow-up inspections by DEQ uncovered additional sources of sediment runoff, as well.

DEQ issued a $44,600 fine to Ballyhack, whose membership fees are said to range from $40,000 to $130,000. The club was ordered to pay $28,275 immediately, and spend the balance of the fine on measures to correct the problems.

Insider Tip: Managing Construction Site Debris Is a Critical Component of Your SWPPP

Regular clean-up of construction site waste is a must in maintaining your Storm Water Pollution Prevention Plan \(SWPPP\). Remember to have consistent checks done throughout your sites to ensure that debris is properly disposed of from all areas, including masonry towers, as well as entrance and exit points. Also be sure to pay attention to concrete washout areas to ensure that water from the washout of concrete trucks is appropriately managed, keeping concrete and other debris from entering storm water systems.
